Trenta Coffee Foils Robbery

A would-be bank robber had to leave empty-handed after he approached a bank teller window right as the teller left to go to the bathroom. Cleveland.com reported Tuesday that a man wearing a nylon stocking mask and baseball hat walked over to the window at Huntington Bank in Chagrin Falls, Ohio, and demanded cash but found no one there. A customer representative tried to open the cash drawer but didn't have a key. (EXPRESS)

Judge Blocks Pa. Voter ID Law

Ruling is good news for Obama's chances in key swing state

Harrisburg, Pa.

A judge on Tuesday blocked Pennsylvania's divisive voter identification requirement from going into effect on Election Day, delivering a hard-fought victory to Democrats who said it was a ploy to defeat President Barack Obama and other opponents who said it would prevent the elderly and minorities from voting.

Commonwealth Court Judge Robert Simpson said in his ruling that he was concerned by the state's efforts to create a photo ID that is easily accessible to voters and he could not rely on the assurances of government officials at this late date that every voter would be able to get a valid ID.

If it stands, it is good news for Obama's chances in Pennsylvania, one of the nation's biggest electoral college prizes.

Simpson's ruling could be appealed to the state Supreme Court, although state officials weren't ready to say Tuesday whether they would appeal. Simpson based his decision on guidelines given to him days ago by the high-court justices, and it could easily be the final word on the law just five weeks before the Nov. 6 election.

Simpson's ruling will allow the law to go into full effect next year, though he could still decide later to issue a permanent injunction as part of the ongoing legal challenge to the law's constitutionality.

Election workers will still be allowed to ask voters for a valid photo ID, but people without it can use a regular voting machine and would not have to cast a provisional ballot or prove their identity to election officials afterward.

Gov. Tom Corbett, a Republican who helped champion the law, declined comment on the ruling and said the state's lawyers were still analyzing it.

The state's Republican Party chairman, Rob Gleason, said he was disappointed and stressed that the law is a "common-sense reform" that is supported in public polling across the political spectrum. In a statement, the Obama campaign said the decision means that "eligible voters can vote on Election Day, just like they have in previous elections in the state." MARC LEVY (AP)

People pass signs last week in Butler, Pa., advertising the requirement that voters show a valid photo ID to vote. A judge on Tuesday blocked the requirement.

Electoral Votes

Pennsylvania's six-month-old voter identification requirement—among the nation's toughest—has sparked a divisive debate over voting rights and become a high-profile political issue in the contest between President Barack Obama and Republican nominee Mitt Romney for Pennsylvania's 20 electoral votes. Pennsylvania, traditionally considered a presidential battleground state, is showing a persistent lead for Obama in independent polls. (AP)

Covert War in N. Africa Widens

U.S. began building counterterror force before Libyan attack

Washington

Small teams of special operations forces arrived at American embassies throughout North Africa in the months before militants launched the fiery attack that killed the U.S. ambassador in Libya. The soldiers' mission: Set up a network that could quickly strike a terrorist target or rescue a hostage.

The White House signed off a year ago on the plan to build the new military counterterror task force in the region, and the advance teams have been there for six months, according to three U.S. counterterror officials and a former intelligence official. All spoke only on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss the strategy publicly.

The effort indicates that the administration has been worried for some time about a growing threat posed by al-Qaeda and its offshoots in North Africa. But officials say the military organization was too new to respond to the attack in Benghazi, where the administration now believes armed al-Qaeda-linked militants surrounded the lightly guarded U.S. compound, set it on fire and killed Ambassador Chris Stevens and three other Americans.

As of early September, the special operations teams still consisted only of liaison officers who were assigned to establish relationships with local governments and U.S. officials in the region. Only limited counterterrorism operations have been conducted in Africa so far.

"There are no plans at this stage for unilateral U.S. military operations" in the region, Pentagon spokesman George Little said Tuesday, adding that the focus was on helping African countries build their own forces.

For the Special Operations Command, spokesman Col. Tim Nye would not discuss the missions except to say that special operations troops are in 75 countries.

KIMBERLY DOZIER (AP)

Down the Road

Eventually, the special operations teams will form the backbone of a military task force responsible for combating al-Qaeda and other terrorist groups across the region with an arsenal that includes drones. But first it will work to win acceptance by helping North African nations build their own special operations and counterterror units. (AP)

Hezbollah Fighters Slain in Syria

Militant group's role may indicate conflict is growing in region

Beirut

A Hezbollah commander and several fighters have been killed inside Syria, a Lebanese official said Tuesday, a development that could stoke already soaring tensions over the Lebanese militant group's role in the civil war next door.

Hezbollah's reputation has taken a beating over its support for the Syrian regime, but any sign that the group's fighters are taking part in the battle raises fears that the conflict could expand into a wider fight engulfing the region.

Hezbollah has stood by Syrian President Bashar Assad since the uprising began 18 months ago, even after the group supported revolts in Egypt, Tunisia, Libya and Bahrain.

Assad's fall would be a dire scenario for Hezbollah. Any new regime led by Syria's majority Sunni Muslims would likely be far less friendly — or even outright hostile — to Shiite Muslim Hezbollah. Iran remains the group's most important patron, but Syria is a crucial supply route. Without it, Hezbollah will struggle to get money and weapons as easily.

The Syrian uprising has left Assad deeply isolated, making his remaining allies such as Iran and Russia all the more important. At last week's gathering of world leaders at the United Nations, dozens of nations excoriated the regime over the conflict that activists say has killed at least 30,000 Syrians.

It was unclear how the Hezbollah militants were killed or whether they had been fighting alongside the Syrian army. But Hezbollah's newspaper al-Intiqad said Hezbollah commander Ali Hussein Nassif, also known as Abu Abbas, was killed "while performing his jihadi duties."

The Syrian opposition has long accused the group of helping the Syrian leadership crack down on the uprising — a claim the group has repeatedly denied. Hezbollah has to tread a careful path with its support for the regime, mindful that many of its supporters in Lebanon dread getting sucked into the conflict. ELIZABETH A. KENNEDY (AP)

Fractured Relationship

Less than two years ago, Syria, Iran, Hamas and Lebanon's militant Hezbollah group were part of what they called an "axis of resistance" against Israel and the U.S. In an editorial aired Monday, Syrian TV said the leader of Hamas, Khaled Mashaal, who pulled Hamas' headquarters out of Damascus this year, had abandoned the resistance movement against Israel and the U.S. Syria's state-run media unleashed a scathing attack on Mashaal, accusing him of turning his back on President Bashar Assad and calling him ungrateful. Attackers Kill At Least 27 Near Nigeria College

Maiduguri, Nigeria

Assailants shot and stabbed to death 27 students Monday night in the second attack near colleges in Nigeria's troubled northeast in the past few days, school authorities said Tuesday, but police say the attacks killed 19 students and six others.

Officials believe students at Federal Polytechnic Mubi were behind the attacks, but the town of Mubi and the region have also suffered from a spate of killings by a radical Islamist sect known as Boko Haram.

The college attack follows the killing Saturday of three students near a university campus in Maiduguri, about 100 miles away. (AP)

Burying the Competition: In some countries, campaigns give out yard signs or offer free lunches. In Honduras — one of Latin America's poorest countries and its most dangerous, with more than 136 people killed each week— candidates dole out different swag: coffins for the destitute. Charities organized by candidates scour neighborhoods in search of families of murder victims who cannot afford a casket to bury their beloved. (AP)

Rome Tears Bonds Of Love From Bridge

Young lovers lose tradition after crews remove padlocks

Rome

Young love sealed itself to the ancient Milvian Bridge. Inspired by a scene out of teen literature, Romans carved their initials onto padlocks and affixed them to the railings before tossing the key into the Tiber. Thus, the Eternal City could bear witness to the boundlessness of juvenile romance.

The custom would spread from the bridge like teen acne.

But in Rome, where perhaps the only thing more exulted than love is aesthetics, young lovers would find their nemesis in Gianni Giacomini. Convinced the 5,000-plus locks were not only sullying the beauty of the monument but also obscuring its place in history, the district's regional president led a campaign to liberate it from the bonds of love.

Not only did old locks rust in the humidity, but as couples broke up, a new tradition arose. Brokenhearted youths would return to the bridge and scrawl vengeful graffiti.

Despite an attempt by Rome Mayor Gianni Alemanno to grant clemency to the trend-setting locks, crews took them down Sept. 10.

A debate has since simmered. Should the story have ended with the score Giacomini 1, Love 0?

Still, the fate of the locks doesn't necessarily trouble the likes of Nicola Misciano, 22, who had affixed a padlock with his girlfriend.

"She is more upset than I am," he said. "It meant a lot to her, so it did mean a lot to me. But let's face it, they were pretty ugly."

ANTHONY FAIOLA (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Backstory

The evidence of locks as talismans of love predate Federico Moccia, but few deny they exploded with his novel "Ho Voglia di Te (I Want You)" in 2006. Moccia said he affixed the first lock to Rome's Milvian Bridge. "I did not want readers who came looking for the lock placed by my characters to be disappointed," he said. One lock became two, then, 200, then thousands. The trend became a hit across Europe, including in Cologne, Germany, above. (TWP)

Waiting for 'The Moment'

DAVID GOLDMAN/AP

In presidential debates, it's often the blunders and zingers that matter most

Washington

In presidential politics, everybody's searching for "the moment." The campaigns don't know when or how it will come, but they watch for something — awkward words, an embarrassing image — that can break through and become the defining symbol of the other guy's flaws.

Now all eyes will be on the three presidential debates, especially the all-important first one Wednesday night, a perfect incubator for such a moment.

The unpredictable nature of the debates is part of what attracts tens of millions of live-TV viewers. A big blunder or "gotcha" quip is sure to be remembered. And President Barack Obama and challenger Mitt Romney will be fielding questions for 4½ hours during all three debates, a long time to stay on message.

"I don't think one event is going to make or break this campaign."

— REPUBLICAN VICE PRESIDENTIAL NOMINEE PAUL RYAN, ON "FOX NEWS SUNDAY," REFERRING TO WEDNESDAY'S PRESIDENTIAL DEBATE IN DENVER

"If we have any moment in terms of seeing the true, the real, the unscripted candidate, it's likely to happen on the debate stage," said Mitchell McKinney, a University of Missouri associate professor who studies the presidential matchups.

This year's campaigns already have spent months looking for that one devastating blow. So far the top contender is Romney's secretly recorded dismissal of "47 percent of Americans" who don't pay taxes and depend on government aid. And then there's Obama's "you didn't build that" remark about business owners.

This year's first presidential debate, focused on the economy and the role of government, offers each man a chance to explain away such mistakes — and the risk of cementing a new one into voters' minds.

Brett O'Donnell is the debate coach credited with teaching Romney how to deflate Newt Gingrich during the Florida primaries. He says that on Wednesday, the GOP nominee needs to confront his video-recorded setback head-on and turn it against Obama.

"He has to turn the 47 percent and make sure people understand the reasoning behind that argument, how that's the result of the president's policies," suggests O'Donnell, who no longer works for the campaign. CONNIE CASS (AP)

The Washington Post's Top Debate Moments

THE FIX

1980: 'There You Go Again'

After Jimmy Carter cast him as an opponent of Medicare and expanding health insurance, Ronald Reagan's memorable "there you go again" was an effective jumping off point for a rebuttal. Taken with his also memorable "are you better off?" closing argument, Reagan commanded the attention.

1992: Bush Checks His Watch

Incumbent George H.W. Bush conspicuously checked his watch just as an audience member asked about how the national debt has affected him personally. What's more, it took the president a couple more minutes to come to terms with the question. The exchange fueled the contrast with Bill Clinton.

2000: Al Gore's Sighs

Debates are as much about projecting personality as politics. Al Gore's sighs at a debate with George W. Bush in 2000 came across as condescending, a perception that didn't help his cause in a historically close race.

››› For more of The Fix's favorite debate moments, go to http://wapo.st/QKkR7a.

So, the Debate Might Be Boring ...

Amid all the hype about the first presidential debate, it's important to remember that there's a chance substance could trump style Wednesday night:

››› Caution: President Barack Obama is a cautious debater. There's little reason to believe — either in his public statements or the private readouts from his debate prep — that Obama will break with that general philosophy Wednesday.

››› Less Risk-Taking: Mitt Romney isn't a risk-taker — so there's little reason to believe he will come out swinging. It's not who he is.

››› Loads of Practice: Wednesday is only one of three presidential debates, so the two candidates' level of preparation will be far higher than it was for Romney during the primaries. (THE WASHINGTON POST)

... But This Should Liven Things Up!

Dupont South to Reopen

Escalator work at the entrance is slated for completion this month

Washington

Metro riders heading to or from Dupont Circle have trekked to the station's north entrance for months as contractors worked on the southern entrance. There is relief coming, commuters: The work should be completed and the southern entrance reopened this month, though the exact date hasn't been set, according to Metro.

The entrance at Connecticut Avenue and 19th Street NW has been closed since Feb. 1 so Metro could replace the three old escalators that used to ferry travelers in and out of the station.

SARAH L. VOISIN/TWP

This work forced riders to rely on the entrance at Connecticut Avenue and Q Street, but that creates problems when those escalators stop working.

Case in point: The entire station was shut down during Tuesday morning's commute when consistent rain poured too much water into the escalators. Riders weren't allowed to enter the station, and trains didn't stop there for about 30 minutes.

Even when the southern entrance reopens, it won't be smooth sailing for commuters at Dupont. Metro also plans to rehabilitate the northern entrance, though at least that entrance should stay open.

Kaine Buys $3M More In Campaign Ad Airtime

Kaine

Tim Kaine, a Democrat, has bought an additional $3 million worth of airtime in his U.S. Senate contest against George Allen, a Republican, as the conservative group Crossroads GPS continues its assault against Kaine with a new ad. Kaine's campaign announced Tuesday that it had purchased the additional time, bringing its total buy through Election Day to $7.5 million. On Tuesday, Crossroads unveiled a spot accusing Kaine of being bad for small businesses. (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Council Eschews Endorsements

Few lawmakers will back colleagues in at-large seat election

Washington

One day after Council Chairman Phil Mendelson said he is supporting the two incumbents in the D.C. Council at-large race, many of the other members on the 12-member body said they won't be endorsing a candidate.

In interviews with The Washington Post, council members Muriel Bowser, D-Ward 4; Kenyan McDuffie, D-Ward 5; Jack Evans, D-Ward 2; and Yvette Alexander, D-Ward 7, said they will not be endorsing a candidate in the at-large race.

Council member Mary M. Cheh, D-Ward 3, also said in a television interview Monday that she is "out of the endorsement business."

Orange

In the Nov. 6 election, council members Michael A. Brown, an Independent, and Vincent B. Orange, a Democrat, are seeking re-election. Often, in general election campaigns, incumbent council members can count on the support of their colleagues, particularly if they are running as the Democratic nominee.

But in conversations with members Tuesday, only council members Jim Graham, D-Ward 1, and Marion Barry, D-Ward 8, said they plan to publicly state their support for Brown and Orange. TIM CRAIG (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Preservationists Move To Protect Corcoran

Washington

Historic preservationists are nominating the interior of the Corcoran Gallery of Art as an architectural landmark to protect the building as the struggling museum considers selling it.

The D.C. Preservation League announced Tuesday that it filed paperwork to amend the Corcoran's D.C. landmark status to include its interior. The 1897 building near the White House was designated a national landmark in 1992.

Rebecca Miller, the preservation league's director, says the building's 1992 designation notes that the Corcoran's exterior and interior make it the capital's premiere example of French Beaux-Arts architecture.

Corcoran officials declined to comment. The museum's board hasn't decided whether to sell the building. (AP)

Police and animal control officers searched the home Thursday and found aquatic species, snakes, dogs, turtles, birds, chickens and geese, a goat and a pig. A kinkajou, a rainforest animal that resembles a ferret, was also removed. Officials say many of the animals were without food or drinking water. (TWP)

MANUEL BALCE CENETA/AP

Nationals right-fielder Jayson Werth, center, celebrates with teammates after Washington clinched the National League East division title Monday night.

Totally Werthwhile

Signing veteran was the first step toward winning the NL East

The Nationals

His hair was soaked with Korbel, and his beard was dripping Miller Lite, but Jayson Werth's eyes were wide and clear.

He looked to the scoreboard, where big, bold letters proclaimed Washington the National League East champion. He looked to the stands, where fans lingered long after the final out Monday to celebrate the clinching of the division and the end of 79 years without any sort of title.

All around him, teammates hollered and bounced around, wearing soaked-through commemorative T-shirts and goggles to protect their eyes from the champagne showers. This was his vision 22 months ago, and it became his reality sooner than even he imagined.

When Werth signed with the Nationals as a free agent in December 2010, people wondered why he would leave the Phillies, perennial contenders, for the Nationals, perennial doormats.

Others wondered whether Washington was crazy to toss $126 million at a 31-year-old outfielder with a history of injuries.

"It was looked at as a gamble and frowned upon by a lot of people," Werth said. "I definitely caught a lot of grief for it. Realistically, I knew the situation I was going to. I said all along that I wanted to go somewhere that I had a chance to win for a long time. It turned out this is probably the best place I could have went."

General manager Mike Rizzo, in explaining the move at the time, touted Werth's production and his fierce drive to win. Before coming to Washington, Werth had been a part of five division champions — four in Philadelphia and one in Los Angeles.

A Historic Season

We will look back on the Nats' record-setting season and ahead to their playoff push in a special edition of Friday's Express.

Signing Werth turned out to be a critical early step in Rizzo's plan to expel a culture of losing. Since Werth's arrival, former top draft picks Stephen Strasburg and Bryce Harper have become regulars. Rizzo balanced the clubhouse by signing quiet but consistent Adam LaRoche, who has twice appeared in the postseason, and trading for gregarious left-hander Gio Gonzalez, who this year became the team's first 20-game winner since baseball came back to town in 2005.

"We had our share of losing here," Rizzo said. "We know how that feels. Every guy that comes here, they've got a winning attitude. They've got makeup and character. That's the reason we're here."

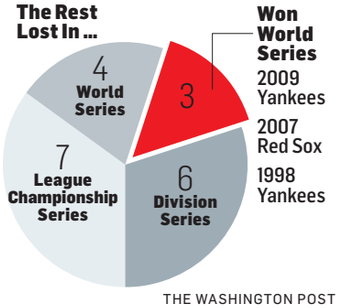

But perhaps the most important development happened almost by accident. Manager Jim Riggleman resigned unexpectedly amid a contract dispute in June 2011, and Rizzo turned immediately to Davey Johnson, one of the winningest managers in recent times and who was a consultant with the club.

When Johnson agreed to manage, players said, the atmosphere changed. The Nats ended the 2011 season on a tear, finishing 80-81, and setting the tone for this year.

"I'll be honest, at the beginning of the year last year, I wasn't so sure," Werth said. "When I got here, this place was upside-down. It wasn't until Davey took over and then September came around that this became the type of team that could really play, that could show up every day and have a lot of heart." DEREK TURNER (FOR EXPRESS)

Better Not to Be the Best?

The Nats and Reds sat tied for baseball's best record entering Tuesday's action. Since the wild card was added to the MLB postseason in 1995, only three teams with the best record in baseball have won the World Series, the last time by the 103-win New York Yankees in 2009. Five wild-card teams have won the World Series, most recently last year by the St. Louis Cardinals. (TWP)

Strasburg's Moment: There was a familiar face at the heart of several celebratory scrums and sprayings of champagne and beer, one who hasn't climbed on a mound since Sept. 7. Stephen Strasburg was every bit a part of the Nats' exhilaration after the team clinched the National League East title on Monday night. Though his furiously debated innings limit has kept him off the field for the rest of the season, Strasburg soaked in the joy like the rest of his teammates. "This is a dream come true," he said, standing on the field with raucous fans still cheering on the celebrations nearly 30 minutes after their 2-0 loss to the Philadelphia Phillies. "It's great to be winners. The bottom line, I'm happy to be a part of it." (TWP)

Moss Makes the Most of New Role

Former top receiver excels as secondary option this season

The Redskins

Veteran wide receiver Santana Moss says he thinks it has been so far, so good in his new role with the Redskins, lining up in the slot in three-receiver formations.

"I feel it's gone as good as it can go," Moss said Monday. "I'm out there. I'm out there making plays. ... Thus far, I've been handling it well."

Moss has 10 catches for 97 yards and one touchdown in the Redskins' first four games of the season. He had three catches in Sunday's triumph at Tampa, with two of them coming on the Redskins' final drive that culminated with place kicker Billy Cundiff's game-winning field goal to beat the Buccaneers 24-22.

"I've been a guy that came in on third downs before earlier in my career," Moss said. "Sometimes you have to just go back and think about what you did in those situations. That's basically what I'm doing. But I'm more mature. I'm more able to handle this because I'm not young and I know this game."

TONI L. SANDYS/TWP

Redskins wide receiver Santana Moss catches a touchdown pass against the Cincinnati Bengals in the third game of the season.

Moss, who's in his 12th NFL season, was a 1,100-yard receiver for the Redskins as recently as two years ago. His production dipped to 46 catches for 584 yards and four touchdowns in 12 games last season, and the Redskins signed free agents Pierre Garcon and Josh Morgan in the offseason in a bid to bolster their receiver corps.

Through four games, the Redskins are ranked third in the league in total offense and fourth in scoring offense. Their record is 2-2 after the last-second win in Tampa.

"For so long, I've been doing it and didn't have the help," Moss said. "Now you have so many guys out there that can help you, you sit back and kind of say, 'Hey, when my time comes, it comes.' I've never been a guy that worries about how many [catches] and all that type of stuff because I feel like whatever your team gives you to be successful, that's all you can really accept. Therefore I take it in stride. I want to win more than anything. So when something was brought upon me like that, the first thing I said was, 'If that's going to help the team, I'm all for it.'"

NHL Talks 'Not ... Encouraging'

Pro Hockey

The financial losses are starting to pile up as a result of the NHL lockout. And on Tuesday, the league made that public.

In speaking to reporters after talks finished up for the day between the NHL and the NHLPA, Deputy Commissioner Bill Daly estimated that the league has lost $100 million in revenues from the canceled preseason. "Today," he said, "was not overly encouraging."

And though they can pick up at any time, for the moment, there are no further talks scheduled. That only further increases speculation that regular-season games could be lost, with an announcement expected sometime this week. The season was slated to begin Oct. 11.

"We are closer by definition [to canceling regular season games]," Daly said. "We are focused on minimizing the damage."

Tuesday's bargaining session focused on the definition of hockey-related revenue and featured NHLPA head Donald Fehr, his brother, Steve, the special counsel to the players' association, and Winnipeg Jets defenseman Ron Hainsey.

"They have made some incremental moves," said Donald Fehr, who expects to informally talk with NHL Commissioner Gary Bettman by Wednesday. "It's clear that the players have made substantial moves towards the owners and the owners have made substantial moves away from the players."

Now in its third week, the lockout has forced many players to head overseas to play on month-to-month contracts. (AP)

TV Breeds Comedy

If I want to laugh at something on a screen, I tend to turn to television more than cinema. When I do find a film particularly funny, it usually features either writers, directors or actors who have a background in TV.

Case in point: writers/directors Judd Apatow and Paul Feig, who co-created "Freaks and Geeks" in 1999 but didn't find success in film until 2005 and 2011, respectively. Their big breaks, "The 40-Year-Old Virgin" and "Bridesmaids," were full of TV actors: Steve Carell and Seth Rogen in the former, Kristen Wiig, Maya Rudolph and Melissa McCarthy in the latter.

By Rudi Greenberg

"Pitch Perfect," the new film about competitive a cappella groups, only has a few TV stars in it (such as: "Workaholics'" Adam DeVine, above, and "The Mindy Project's" Anna Camp). But the movie comes from the mind of a TV writer: "30 Rock" and "New Girl" scribe Kay Cannon.

Not surprisingly, "Pitch Perfect" has the surreal nature and sharp writing of a "30 Rock" episode, just at a feature length. As I was watching, I tried to think of another movie this year I had laughed harder at. All that came to mind? "21 Jump Street" — which was based on a TV series.

Bond Never Dies

The venerable spy-movie franchise turns 50 ahead of its 23rd film, 'Skyfall'

Screen

It was a meeting of the two most famous British people on Earth: Queen Elizabeth II turned to her tuxedo-wearing guest and said, "Good evening, Mr. Bond."

The pairing of these icons, the English monarch and the king of spies — in a film for the Opening Ceremonies of the London Olympics — was a thrilling moment. It scarcely mattered that one of them was fictional. Agent 007 is real to millions of moviegoers, and once again, they will flock to see Bond battle for queen and country when his 23rd official screen adventure, "Skyfall," opens in the U.S. on Nov. 9.

He's come a long way in the 50 years since the release — on Oct. 5, 1962 — of a modestly budgeted spy movie called "Dr. No." It introduced a dapper but deadly secret agent (played by Sean Connery) who wore Savile Row suits, drove an Aston Martin, liked his martinis shaken, not stirred, and announced himself as "Bond, James Bond."

What's the secret of his survival? Familiarity, says Roger Moore, who played Bond in seven films, more than any other actor.

"It's sort of like a bedtime story: As long as you don't go too far away from the original, the child is happy," Moore says. "The audience gets what it's expecting: beautiful girls, actions, gadgets — there's a formula."

"Dr. No" arrived in theaters with perfect timing, as Britain swapped postwar austerity for growing prosperity.

Bond's world of cars, casinos and caviar was sexy, luxurious and colorful. Instead of a gray, shadowy figure, here was spy as a glamorous jet-setter. The films turned Cold War anxiety into a thrill-ride from which the good guy always emerged triumphant.

"There had been nothing like it before," says Graham Rye, editor of 007 magazine. "When 'Dr. No' exploded onto the screen, it had a pretty visceral effect on everybody."

Since then, Bond (who has been portrayed by six actors: Connery, George Lazenby, Moore, Timothy Dalton, Pierce Brosnan and Daniel Craig) has survived showdowns with enemies from uber-villain Ernst Blofeld to steel-toothed assassin Jaws. More impressively, he has weathered the social revolution of the 1960s, financial woes, the end of the Cold War and the dawn of the War on Terror.

"Bond, like diamonds, is forever," Rye says. JILL LAWLESS (AP)

The Best Of Bond

In honor of Agent 007's 50th anniversary, here are some all-time Bond bests.

Best Bond Girl
Just the vision of Ursula Andress (above, as Honey Ryder) striding from the ocean in "Dr. No" is so famous and so stirring, it's hard to top. The very image personifies the gorgeous, mysterious cool of the Bond girl.

Most Fearsome Villain
Blofeld is the easy answer because he's appeared in so many Bond films, and because he's the inspiration for the Dr. Evil character in the "Austin Powers" movies.

Coolest Gadget
It's the car, of course, that's so readily identifiable as James Bond's most reliable and versatile weapon. Famously, he drives a silver Aston Martin, but it's come in various models, with an assortment of handy tricks and toys.

Hip Web Series Takes Next Step

'Awkward Black Girl' Issa Rae makes the leap to network TV

Comedy

Issa Rae, creator of the popular two-year-old Web series "The Misadventures of Awkward Black Girl," is making the jump to network television.

Deadline reported Monday that Shondaland, the production company run by "Grey's Anatomy" creator and producer Shonda Rhimes, has sold a half-hour comedy by Rae to ABC.

Rae, 27, will write and co-executive produce the show, called "I Hate LA Dudes." According to Deadline, the comedy will center on "an aspiring journalist, new to Los Angeles, who becomes the lone female voice on a budding, male-driven Internet talk show, while learning to decode the often humiliating and exasperating rules of the L.A. dating scene."

Rae said in an interview with The Washington Post that Rhimes' team has "been a dream" in terms of helping her develop the idea. "It's a whole other level."

Rae came to the attention of television executives after "Awkward Black Girl," which was originally posted episode by episode on YouTube, attracted millions of viewers and won a Shorty Award, honoring the best shows in social media.

The second season of "Awkward Black Girl" was financed by YouTube's "I Am Other Channel," created by Pharrell Williams.

Rae says her dreams of opening up television for "relatable" people of color seem to be coming true — all at once. One of her biggest issues about black characters on mainstream television and film had been that "I don't see me." But, she says, the deal with ABC shows that "there are still opportunities for awkward black girls." DENEEN L. BROWN (THE WASHINGTON POST)

More on Issa Rae

The Oct. 7 issue of The Washington Post Magazine will contain a profile of Issa Rae, in which she discusses the impetus for "Awkward Black Girl," the show's future and her childhood years in Potomac, which she says were "like living in a Saturday-morning 'Saved by the Bell.'" Read the article in print or online this weekend at Washingtonpost.com/magazine. (TWP)

Fall Escapades

Beyond leaf-peeping, there's plenty to see, do in New Hampshire

Excursions

For a small state, New Hampshire offers a variety of experiences for free in the fall, whether it's scenic driving, surfing, hiking, moose watching, browsing antiques shops or spotting huge pumpkins. Foliage reports show leaf color has started showing up, but beyond that, here are a few suggestions to enjoy the waterways and mountains in the state at no cost:

JIM COLE PHOTOS/AP

5 Free Things

1. Quiet Escapes

Check out one of New Hampshire's peaceful, scenic settings — the Cathedral of the Pines in Rindge, an open-air cathedral on a hilltop. Stones taken from around the world make up an altar recognized by Congress as a National Memorial to American men and women who lost their lives in war. The site is free and open through Oct. 31. Information is available at Cathedralofthepines.org.

2. Kancamagus Highway

The 34.5-mile east-west drive on State Route 112 winds through the White Mountains between the towns of Lincoln and Conway, surrounding you in stunning natural beauty. The maple, birch and beech trees are at their peak usually in the first and second weeks of October. Find more details at Visitnh.gov or Kancamagushighway.com.

3. The Great Outdoors

Day-use and camping fees are not charged at 26 camping sites, trailheads, ponds and picnic areas in the White Mountain National Forest, including Twin Mountain, above, with peak fall foliage. This is for the adventurous type who wants to backpack in and camp off the trail or at a backcountry shelter or tent platform in undeveloped or wilderness areas. Other free activities include hiking, biking, scenic drives. The trails, some of them heading up a few of the 4,000-foot mountains, offer varying degrees of difficulty. For more free opportunities, information and backcountry rules, visit Fs.usda.gov/whitemountain.

4. Moose Watching

There's still a good chance to view a moose in New Hampshire's North Country through mid-October. Some companies offer moose-watching tours, but the intrepid traveler can set out at dusk on Route 3 in Pittsburg, Route 16 in Errol and other roads to try to spot one. Moose are unpredictable, so it's common to see the "Brake for Moose" signs up north. More information can be found at Nhgrand.com/itineraries.aspx.

5. Surfing

Done leaf-peeping? The sunbathers are gone, but New Hampshire's 17 miles of ocean coastline are attracting more surfers this time of year. The watch for hurricanes and other weather conditions may keep some wary, but surfers say they contribute to some of the best surfing conditions in the Northeast. Check conditions at Magicseaweed.com.

"As awesome a feat it would be for Miguel Cabrera to win the Triple Crown, I still want to see a horse win the Triple Crown in my lifetime."

— @RAYMOOCH thinks the Detroit Tigers third baseman is having a heck of a year at the plate but is more intrigued with the possibility of a horse taking the Preakness, Kentucky Derby and Belmont Stakes.

"Being that the rest of me was soaked, it was hard to distinguish between the sweat and the water. I caught a whiff of the coffee Jamie made. And all I could think about at that moment was, That was badass."

— ALYSSARUN AT NOTARUNNER.COM was impressed with herself for finishing a run in the rain Tuesday morning.

"If I had to bet on it, I'd put my money on the Foos making a return before too long. Rock is clearly in [Dave] Grohl's blood and the band has already endured for so long (and it's still so good) that it would be crazy to end it all so abruptly."

— DAVID WOODS AT MANOLITH.COM remarks after the Foo Fighters lead singer said at a concert Saturday night in Central Park that it might be their last show ever.

Horoscope

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Take care that you don't let a personal issue get out of hand today. You don't want others to become embroiled in your own private clash.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) The simple and straightforward approach is certainly best today. You'll want your goals to be simple and realistic, too.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You may have to do something that you had sworn you would never do — but it's not that big a deal, really! Don't fret!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You'll see things from the proper perspective provided someone close to you shows you the way. Teamwork is the name of the game.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Concentrate on issues that are raised as a result of practical, down-to-earth discussion. Don't get too theoretical or philosophical.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) The messages you receive early in the day will make much more sense once you receive one last important addendum.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You may be overwhelmed by the sheer volume of information coming your way today — but you can assemble it into manageable parcels, surely.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Take a look at the big picture and see if there isn't a better position for you to be in; much depends on marketing right now.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) What was advertised may not be what you get today — and you'll very likely have words with someone over this unfortunate occurrence.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You don't have to put up with any disrespect; insist that those around you treat you, and each other, appropriately.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You can't afford to miss even the slightest piece of information that comes your way, as it all will affect your work substantially.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Results may be difficult to assess; perhaps you should look more carefully at the process instead, see what it has given you.

'Ladies, Be Comfortable With Your Bodies. But Don't Say I Told You That'

Christina Aguilera says she was misquoted Monday when an interview segment, purportedly from a Billboard article, started attracting attention. According to E!, the quotes about Aguilera's weight (she allegedly said she was tired of being forced to be a "skinny white girl") were made up. The quotes first appeared on Usmagazine.com. VISION OF RENEWAL

Giving ourselves and our children the gift of renewal

One block east of the Cleveland Park Metro
2850 Quebec Street NW, Washington DC 20008

adas israel CONGREGATION

Adas Israel Congregation, the oldest and largest Conservative Synagogue in Washington, DC, announces the October 14 launch of a historic innovation project for its landmark midcentury building - all part of a wider "Vision of Renewal" initiative to bring Adas even further into the 21st century. At the heart of the renewal is the transformation of four worship & gathering spaces, and the creation of MakomDC (Place DC).

Quebec Street Foyer

MakomDC

Charles E. Smith Sanctuary

"The freshly minted MakomDC (Place DC) will be a thriving center of Jewish conversation, of real dialogue. It will feature comfortable seating and tables for lively discussion, books and technology, coffee and snacks, speaker jams, art, engaging sessions, and even interactive prayer services. It will be a place where people, ideas, and Jewish experiences collide."

–Senior Rabbi Gil Steinlauf
